We have had the pleasure of another successful fall seminar. Great teacher, great classes, great food and great company. Loads of thanks to all for the hard work to put it all together and to everyone who participated. We sure missed those of you who were unable to attend.

It's again time to focus on our October Bunco. Try to keep selling raffle tickets for the beautiful quilt and remind all your acquaintances to call in their reservation for a table.

November meeting will soon sneak up on us. Be thinking about 2025 dues, election of officers and sign ups for next years projects. Seems the months just slip by so quickly.

Hoping we can all continue to enjoy this fall weather. The longer it lasts the better! Take good care everyone.

SHARING MEMORIES

A person never knows when they will hear words of wisdom. For instance, as preparation for a recent decorative painting project, the painters were instructed to crumple a piece of tissue paper, then smooth it out and apply it to a wood surface. The instructor said, "Wrinkles are okay". As a senior citizen, hearing that wrinkles are okay I also took to mean physical wrinkles. Maybe now these advertisements for miracle anti-wrinkle creams and serums won't sound so appealing.

In painting class and in life, there are going to be wrinkles. The physical ones tend to come as we age and it seems acceptance is the most realistic emotion. But life also includes big tragedies--life altering ones. One of the cruelest is the death of an infant or young child. Our painting group participates in a program for grieving parents. We decorate paper mache boxes that are presented to the family that is suffering. We hope that the boxes serve as a receptacle for the child's mementos and will be treasured. The painters are not acquainted with these families but do have experience with loss and grief of family members of other ages and we paint the boxes with love and caring. There is a connection as we attempt to have a positive impact in their time of suffering. We cannot stop their pain but we hope we can bring even the tiniest of smiles to these eyes filled with tears

BUNCO BUNCO BUNCO

October 19 is fast approaching and that means BUNCO Day. Please remind your family and friends. As of now I have no one signed up to play.

Reminder: Lunch of sloppy Joe's, chips, coffee and water for $7.00.

If a player brings someone who has never played BUNCO she will receive a ticket for our 50/50 drawing.

Of course don't forget to bring treats. Set up between 10:00 and 10:30.

Thank you!
